A new program is tackling mental health 911 calls in OKC. What is Mobile Integrated Health?

Oklahoma City has launched Mobile Integrated Healthcare, a Fire Department-led program that sends trained behavioral health professionals to respond to mental health-related 911 calls instead of police. Developed in response to calls for police reform, the program aims to de-escalate crises, reduce the burden on law enforcement, and connect individuals to appropriate care. Early results show positive impacts, with plans to expand services further.

Local mental health efforts spotlighted during Mental Health Awareness Month

During Mental Health Awareness Month, Fayette County Public Health (FCPH) in Washington Court House, Ohio, is highlighting local mental wellness efforts. On May 15, the Fayette County Suicide Prevention Coalition appeared on WCHC-TV's Fayette FYI to discuss mental health needs and available resources, aiming to reduce stigma and boost community involvement. That same day, local groups began shaping the next Community Health Improvement Plan based on the county's recent health assessment. FCPH encourages public participation in these efforts to enhance mental health services and support systems in the area.
